I'm Alice Parker, Executive Secretary of the Columbia Basin Development League and a retired farmer in the Columbia Basin Project at Royal City. The Columbia Basin Development League is a non-profit organization that supports the Columbia Basin Irrigation Project. Members of our organization consists of individuals, businesses, and entities who support and believe in the value of the Columbia Basin Project, both environmentally and economically.

On behalf of the members of the Columbia Basin Development League I speak today to Oppose Alternative 4: Dam Breaching. We support and believe in saving salmon but we believe the debate is about taking out dams and not about saving fish. We do believe that salmon is part of our heritage but we need a strong economy for the Northwest too. A strong economy is the force that enables citizens to implement good environmental practices. A look at Third World Countries shows how the lack of a strong economy is not conducive to protecting the environment.

Conflicting information abounds regarding salmon recovery. The intent of the All-H paper addresses the habitat, hydropower, hatcheries, and harvest and the role each plays in recovery. The solution to recovery must be a comprehensive plan that encompasses all the "H's and not just hydro.

The Columbia Basin Development League is a non-profit organization that supports the Columbia Basin Irrigation Project. Members of our organization consists of individuals, businesses, and entities who support and believe in the value of the Columbia Basin Project, both environmentally and economically.

On behalf of the members of the Columbia Basin Development League I speak today to Oppose Alternative 4: Dam Breaching. We support and believe in saving salmon but we believe the debate is about taking out dams and not about saving fish. We do believe that salmon is part of our heritage but we need a strong economy for the Northwest too. A strong economy is the force that enables citizens to implement good environmental practices. Conflicting information abounds regarding salmon recovery. The intent of the All-H paper addresses the habitat, hydropower, hatcheries, and harvest and the role each plays in recovery. The solution to recovery must be a comprehensive plan that encompasses all the "H's and not just hydro.

COMMON SENSE MUST PREVAIL. All citizens of the Northwest and their livelihood's must be a factor in the decision making process. Not just a certain segment of the population.
